PREFACE

IT is remarkable that a college which has long been so eminent for its student singing in both fraternity and college life, whose glee club has won so commanding a position among its peers, and out of which have gone so many well-known musicians, should for three-score years and ten have been too modest to put before the eyes of men a collection of its own song treasures. Delay, however, has brought about at least this desirable result, that a book of ample size is easily compiled from the best of the large body of available material, of which two or three times the amount contained in this volume has been carefully sifted by the editors. Most of the songs are, accordingly, distinctively Wesleyan songs; but room has been made for a few of those generally popular throughout the college world, and especially so at Wesleyan.

Nearly all the songs have been arranged to be sung especially by male voices, in harmony with the custom now prevalent in similar collections; and, to facilitate a ready comprehension of the music, the part containing the melody has been usually indicated, where it is not to be sung by the first tenors. Some idea of the tempo has been given by the metronome marks; but of course this at times depends to a considerable extent upon individual feeling, being, for example, often noticeably accelerated by a large winning score, or the proximity of a pair of unusually bright eyes.

The hearty thanks of the editors are hereby expressed to all those who have contributed to the success of the book, especially to the publishers and owners of copyright songs who have without compensation generously granted permission for their use here.

If the book thus offered for the kindly consideration, and for the assiduous vocal testing, of Wesleyan alumni and students be only a beginning, yet it is with confidence that Wesleyan men will steadily build upon this foundation a structure of ultimately superlative excellence.

FORWARD, EVERY MAN

Words by T. S. CLINE,' Air, "THE MAN BEHIND THE GUN"

We praise the gallant Spartans, who with King Leonidas
Defied the haughty Persians to advance;
They numbered but three hundred, yet they held Mount Œtna's pass
Until the fatal path was found by chance.
We praise the gallant Thespians of dread Thermopylae,
Who staid and died like heroes in the fray;
What though the Spartans were about to fall by treachery.
'Twas no time then for allies to betray.

Chorus. Then forward every man for Wesleyan!
To victory again for Wesleyan!
Our numbers may be few,
But all our hearts are true,
And beat as one for Wesleyan.

So loyal sons of Wesleyan, go forward to the fray
In numbers less than Sparta's noble band;
The strife may be uneven but we're bound to win the day,
Because, like Spartans, joined in heart and hand.
But if unhappy fortune shall portend our sure defeat,
Like Thespians we'll stand behind the team;
We're one in our allegiance, and united we will meet
All foes who threaten Weslevan's glorious name. Chorus.

Shout! let the merry chorus sound!

For our Alma Mater dear!
Forward, then, let Wesleyan's glory never fade;
And may her loyal sons the victors e'er be made.
Onward, then, Sorrow hasten in her flight,
Let our hearts beat high for Wesleyan in her might.
The breezes blow around us,
Teeming June again surrounds us
With moods of joy and sadness,
In our honored college home.
The breezes blow around us,
Teeming June again surrounds us,
Our hearts beat high with gladness,
These gay and festive days.
Then higher, higher, we'll fling our banner,
Unfurled to the Northern clime;
Let the wild winds climb over rock and pine,
To their shrine in the golden sky.

FAREWELL SONG

Words by CALEB T. WINCHESTER, '69

Music arranged from "MARTHA"
by C. F. P.

Andante ♩=88

TENOR I.
TENOR II.

1. Like a dream that passeth fleet-ly, Like the fad-ing sun-set light,
2. We shall miss the well-known fa-ces, Kind-ly words and hearty song,
3. Dim be-fore each waiting brother Spreads a fu-ture all un-known,
4. Then, boys, ere the bonds be broken, Ere we sing the farewell song,

Melody
BASS I.
BASS II.

Like glad mu-sic dy-ing sweet-ly Seems our col-lege life to-night.
As we leave the dear old plac-es That we've known and loved so long.
And each one must leave the oth-er, Each one go his way a-lone.
Ere the parting words be spok-en, Let us pledge our friendship strong.

cresc

Years of care-less, youth-ful glad-ness, Hope-ful years too bright to last,
As the eve-ning shadows lengthen, And the part-ing hour draws near,
For-ward look we each with won-der Where that fu-ture gate-way opes;
It must shortly be de-nied us E'er to meet as we have done;

f

Years undimmed by aught of sad-ness, Fled too soon, are now all past.
How the bonds of friendship strengthen, And our brothers seem more dear!
But our backward looks are fond-er, And our mem'ries drown our hopes.
But what-e'er in life be-tide us, May God bless us ev-'ry one.
